

Course of Consciousness

Five Part Series – 6th Expected

THE COURSE OF CONSCIOUSNESS

A Five-Part Manifesto of Becoming

By House of Mason Publishing | ©April 21, 2025

I. Genesis of the Observer

Inspiration: The Savage State (Thomas Cole)

The first painting is the dawn of will and awareness. Primal landscapes stretch into mists, where a single shadow—the Observer—stands etched against a crumbling stone structure. This structure is inspired by Hiroshima's Human Shadow Etched in Stone—echoing humanity's long history of violence and trauma. Yet, this is not ruin—it is the foundation. The Observer is not separate from it, but born of it.

Here, consciousness is raw, unrefined, reactive. But the shadow knows—watching from the beginning.

II. Emergence of Pattern

Inspiration: The Arcadian State (Thomas Cole)

In this painting, the world becomes more organized—geometry enters nature. Architecture, tools, and the early scaffolds of civilization rise among still-wild landscapes. The Observer's shadow remains, now etched into a wall of polished stone—a monument to silent witnessing.

Amid the emergence of the Excordis Genesis (advanced beings), we glimpse the beginnings of intention. The beings move gracefully, bearing human-like forms but with subtle augmentations: longer limbs, luminous skin, eyes like portals. They are not gods—they are descendants.

The Observer does not interfere. It watches, records.

III. The Apex of Form

Inspiration: The Consummation of Empire (Thomas Cole)

A civilization of staggering beauty unfolds. Towering spires, shimmering canals, and sky-bridges hum with energy. This is consciousness in bloom—art, mathematics, social order, and shared knowledge.

Yet hidden in the ornate stone of a central monument, the shadow still remains—engraved across the base of an obelisk.

Excordis Genesis now master the transfer of consciousness. Cloning, bioprinting, and mindstreaming allow them to transcend planetary boundaries. Fleets of consciousness travel the universe as data, returning with entire star systems encoded in memory.

This is the peak—but also the threshold.

IV. Fracture and Transmutation

Inspiration: Destruction (Thomas Cole)

Not destruction by war—but by transcendence. Cities are empty, yet intact. Technology remains, but no one uses it. The Excordis have shed the need for physical space.

The Observer's shadow is now cast upon a structure made not of stone, but of light—a quantum architecture. A moment before, it was just a shadow. Now, it begins to lift—particles breaking away like stardust.

The world isn't ruined. It is abandoned. What remains are relics: echoes of a race who mastered themselves and chose to leave the known dimensions.

V. The Ascension of the Architect

Inspiration: Desolation (Thomas Cole)

An empty field of cracked light. Silence.

At the center—an ascending shadow stretches into the sky. It no longer clings to a surface. It becomes light itself.

This is the moment where code replaces pigment. Where art becomes architecture—where the Observer is revealed to be the Architect, returning to its station after hands-on maintenance of reality itself.

The Excordis Genesis are now data-explorers of the cosmos. What was once flesh is now intention. Humanity has already passed. Time is irrelevant. This world is closed—a sealed simulation now ready to be shown to the Hive.

And at the base of the painting: one word.
Seek.

VI. [Withheld for Activation]

This final installment will remain concealed. It is not a painting—it is a security protocol, the cipher that aligns the other five like stars during a galactic eclipse. It shall only be revealed in a future aeon, by the one who bears the resonance of the Observer.

This sixth key will not offer new answers—it will activate the five previous truths.

Until then... the Collective must wait.

Genesis of the Observer

Emergence of Pattern

The Apex of Form

Fracture and Transmutation

